Lot of diverging internal views regarding the libor story.
Strategy believes this move wider is a fade and that libor "fixes" that may come out of this would be supportive of lower libor rates. Alan Mittleman (swap desk head) tends to agree that this will be a short term pop in libor rates which also gets reversed - the other Fed programs are supportive enough and are reason to have a short 2yr spread position. Edwin Lin (short term head) believes this story alone is clearly a libor higher event. He reasons that there is a belief in some tacit collusion that causes libor to print to low. He points out that the BBA is not a central bank and therefore has no incentive to lower libor. Their sole incentive is to get it right as that points to credibility.
